WOMEN OF FASHION IN GAY DEVON GATHERING

Last Day of Horse Show Most Important of Meet to Feminine Mind.

With Jupiter Pluvius "among the missing" today, the final and to feminine minds, the most important day of the horse show, dawned bright and clear. The country around Devon, fresh and green from its bath, fairly beckoned one to turn out early.

Owing, probably, to the fact that femininity was the order of the day, the oval had a greater scattering of the fair sex than has been usual on previous mornings, when mere man judges the classes.

Mrs. Archibald Barkie and her guest, Mrs. Alexander B. Duncan, of New York, appeared early in the former's box. Mrs. Barkie wore a pale blue silk sweater coat over a white accordion-pleated crepe de chine skirt and a sheer white blouse, while her hat was a large black straw model, turned up sharply at the back and trimmed in front with a small bunch of feathers.

Her guest wore a white frock and over it a corn-colored sweater. Her hat was a brown sailor.

Mrs. Harry Wain Harrison, Mrs. David R. Sharpe and Mrs. Charles Randolph Snowden were interested spectators. Mrs. Harrison was garbed in the conventional white linen with a shimmering golden brown silk sweater and a brown straw helmet-shaped hat. Over white linen, Mrs. Snowden wore a white frock and over it a corn-colored sweater. Her hat was a brown sailor.

In the Judges' stand was Mrs. R. Dobson Altman, gowned in black broadcloth and white furs. Mrs. William L. Hirst made a striking picture in royal purple with a sunburst straw shade hat. Mrs. Thomas Ashton, looking lovely in white linen, with a black and white straw hat, was one of the first arrivals. Mrs. Henry Drinker Riley, who also appeared early in one of the boxes, wore a khaki-colored suit and a yellow straw sailor, faced with green, with a white scarf around the crown.

In the sun grew high in the heavens today became much warmer and more summy costumes were noticed. Mrs. Charles A. Munn, Jr., looked particularly charming in a sheer white frock of handkerchief linen, made quite simply, with small tucks at trimming. A wide white leather girdle encircled her waist and on her head was a small panama hat. Over her furs and a small white hat, Mrs. Ashton wore a wide drooping-brim model of white Milan straw, the top covered by flowered Georgette crepe with a deep blue velvet ribbon around the crown.

Mrs. Joseph B. McCall, who was among the early occupants of a box, looked well in a white serge tailcoat with white fox furs and a small wide-brim hat of many colors, trimmed with spreading blue-glass feathers. A coming debutante, Miss Josephine C. S. Foster, wore a two-piece coat suit of steel gray cloth with a matching skirt, blue and white braid and a small close-fitting black hat.
